Staying Focused on Employee Needs

How Pre-building and Testing Healthcare Furniture Can Improve the Employee Experience

Need a non-standard furniture solution?
StudioCraft will meet you where you are in the design process.

Project Description

When CHI Franciscan Health, a leading healthcare provider on the Olympic Peninsula, needed custom furniture solutions that would elevate the look of their Harrison Acute Care facility and meet their efficiency needs, they turned to StudioCraft and our local dealer partner. From spacious storage islands and workstations to hard working tables, benches, and more, we pre-built and delivered refined, practical furnishings that enhance the staff and patient experience.

Process

Using an iterative design process, we worked with our dealer partner, the client, and their architect to create custom designs that go beyond the limitations of standard office furniture. These included highly flexible medical supply storage islands, Corian end caps for modular workstations, laminate surgical cart corral areas, Corian tables and benches, and glass tops for tables.

Solution

The unique solutions we developed evolved from our deep understanding of the demands of the healthcare industry along with the solving the challenges of working with traditional systems furniture. Experience has also taught us the value of pre-building and user testing our solutions. This rigorous attention to detail eliminates on-site installation challenges and helps clients open their facilities faster. That's why—prior to installation—we created a mockup for the medical supply island and asked nurses who would be working in the space to test it out. Their invaluable feedback allowed us to refine the exact look, function, and size the client and their architect desired.

After successfully producing over 20 medical supply islands and more than 60 Corian endcaps—all while offering competitive pricing—the client asked us to create custom Corian tables and benches for the hospital's cafeteria. We were awarded this part of the project because of our demonstrated quality, responsiveness, and exceptional service.
